The SAEA promotes and supports the development, application, research, and exchange of best teaching and learning practices in sustainable agriculture education and curricula through communication, training, development, and collaborative activities for teachers and learners

We aim to serve as a vibrant network for individuals and organizations involved in sustainable agriculture by:

- ☆ Promoting and disseminating curricula, best educational and experiential learning practices, and research related to the teaching and learning of sustainable agriculture.
- ☆ Engaging in activities to aid the professional development of sustainable agriculture educators and students.
- ☆ Advocating the establishment of sustainable agriculture education programs.
- ☆ Contributing to the growth of sustainable agriculture in the U.S. and abroad
- ☆ Serving as an advocate for sustainable agriculture in other contexts and in collaboration with other organizations relevant to sustainable agriculture education.
- ☆ Providing a public forum for addressing issues in sustainable agriculture education teaching and learning.

Iowa State University to host the SAEA's 3rd participant-led conference!

We invite you to continue making SAEA a reality by joining this adventure as a volunteer and participant of the next conference.

SAEA offers exciting online opportunities to learn with and from other supporters of sustainable agriculture education:

The Sustainable Agriculture Educational Materials (SAEM) database is now available!
A listserv to facilitate the dialogue of sustainable agriculture education is open for activity!

The SAEA is a direct, concrete outcome of participants' work during the first annual Facilitating Sustainable Agriculture Education Conference in January 2006. A 2007 conference was held to continue efforts and celebrate the launch of the SAEA. Learn about progress made so far and how you can help further shape the SAEA by visiting our new website.
